I think every one will perceive at a subsection of the immediate benefit, in almost every regard, which would result from a few of these benefits. In the first place, we should get rid of a whole army of assessing and collecting ugents, the cost of whose support, if stated correctly, would alarm the people. Next, the embarrassment totrade, by the requirements of which returns are frequently incorrect and not unents of which returns are frequently incorrect through ignorance and not unents of which returns are frequently through fruid, would cease. Let us here anticipate another objection lloss not your plan savor of cauralization? and are we not already suffering enough from that principle? Does no the Federal Government, and particular ly sluce the close of the rebellion, interfere with the domestic concerns of the States, to a degree not warrantechy the powers conferred upon Congress by the States, in the Constitution? And will you advocate an extension of this interference? My answer to this is, that during the prevalence of the rebellion, the old maxim, Inter arman leges sident, pur our Constitution and laws into alwayshee. the temporary aggression of the Golffiel was the temporary aggression of the Feders head under the other maxim, Salus popus suprema Lex.
